Maintenance Types

Planned

The Planned Maintenance contract is the ideal means of bringing your roof up to an acceptable standard or by carrying out work of a more complex nature. That said, it is also recommended to put a maintenance contract in place even with a completely new roof.

Planned Maintenance contracts should be used as the first steps towards the provision of an ongoing program designed to increase the life of your roof. Once the roof has been repaired and upgraded through a Planned Maintenance contract it should be made the subject of a Cyclical Maintenance contract.

Cyclical

All roofs need to be maintained at least twice a year. Once in autumn to prepare for winter and again in the spring to deal with what winter brings.

Once a Planned Maintenance contract has been completed, arrangements should be made for Cyclical Maintenance. This will ensure that the work and the cost of bringing your roof up to standard will not have to be incurred again.

Responsive

With an extensive list of commercial and domestic clients, we are experienced and always prepared to act immediately when a roofing need of any sort arises.

The Responsive Maintenance contract allows for the collection of a number of items that require attention to be undertaken during one or more consecutive days. This reduces costs incurred in responding to a single item.

Emergency

This type of service requires immediate action and short response times from Curry Roofing.

Emergencies happen without notice. From storm damage to lack of maintenance; we offer a rapid, safe and waterproof response in all circumstances.
